The second half is a bit more technical, and can be found here (PDF) . There are links in this blog to several articles that deal with the problem of the link speed being too fast, and how to identify the exact problem that is causing this speed gain. These have been written by Microsoft researchers (see below) and have been reproduced here . Other popular articles I read about this issue include this one from my sister (who goes by the username "DarthVagana," which sounds kind of cool) which is also from Microsoft:.. In particular I have enjoyed working with my mentor Mike, who I've been fortunate to work alongside when I was young. This connection has extended beyond my academic career, I consider him one of my best mentors of all time. I have enjoyed working with a lot of people including the likes of Stephen Hawking and Alan Turing, who are also incredibly hard-working people who I also greatly admire.. The Microsoft Windows 8.1 SP2 fix also includes a bit of extra software that should improve load time slightly. In my opinion, I would recommend reading this article for details on how to use this additional software:..

The Microsoft blog post says (to the best of my knowledge): Windows Update, which you install at the Windows Update link in your browser, checks for updates on your computer's hard drive before the update is installed on your computer. As soon as the update is added to the hard drive, Windows Update uses this info to download and install the new update. Windows Store Updates are created automatically by computers. To install a Windows Store Update, click Start and type Update. In the following windows open a new tab, and navigate to the location where you found the updates files. Click on Update . When this is done, Windows Update checks for updates. In certain operating systems, that check happens even if the device doesn't have an Internet connection. For example in Mac OS X you usually have Internet connectivity to your Mac, but you can't easily check for updates since all of the Windows Store Update software comes from the Mac OS X installer. You can try disabling Internet connectivity to the Macintosh, but that may cause more problems in the future. If it doesn't work, you must create the .reg file, which is required to apply the updates. If you make a new shortcut to the .reg file with Control+x, or use another shortcut or other similar operation, this should remove this problem..pdf.. Here in Windows 10 the problem is that the Windows update service that Microsoft has enabled is not very reliable on Windows 8.1, and seems to throw the wrong version of this software at you for every update. I would expect to see this behavior if the update files were not manually downloaded, but instead run by the client app. It is not exactly that difficult to fix. A quick fix, though..
